

THE NEW IN-BETWEENS: PROGRAMMING FOR AGES 18-30

“Eighty million potential library users were born between 1982–1995. These Echo Boomers constitute more research, social media use, and digital navigation than the previous three generations combined - as well as 20% of the current electorate.”

Echo Boomers are the catalyst to several social, economic, and technological changes. This generation, also referred to as Millennials or Generation Y, have shown to be a more tolerant and open demographic in society. They are always digitally connected and are shifting the practices of information curation, retrieval, and analytics. However, this is the smallest group of community users in public libraries today.

Their proficiency in obtaining information and entertainment as well as the tendency to delay family planning has left libraries practically off the radar of echo boomers. The objectives to library services for 20s & 30s is manifold and include: introducing this important group of our voting population to learn and appreciate the services offered to their community, promoting life-long learning and edutainment commitment, showcasing public libraries in an attractive light, as well as offering alternative economic services for job seeking, education, networking and entertainment.”
